Van Hagen swore last week that Flora Whiston accompanied her to Hitchcock's room in the West Forty-first street boarding-house in December, 1996, when the actor is alleged to have mistreated both girls.

After a minute's pause to catch his breath, Mr. Garvan undertook to show that before the Grand Jury Flora Whiston had admitted going to the boarding-house with Hitchcock, John B. Stanchfield, chief attorney for the defense, objected to this line of interrogation, but he was overruled.

Told to Tell Story, She Says.

Garvan read from the Grand Jury minutes, showing that Flora Whiston admitted telephoning to Hitchcock; admitted telephoning to Hitchcock; admitted meeting him at Forty-first street and Either when the minutes and mally admitted the face in the read attempted to wrong Flora, but was required, that he gave them money and went away.

During the recess the girl stayed in the witness room. The jurors spent time reading papers. Hitchcock remained in his chair.

When Mr. Garvan returned from upstairs he had Agent Vincent Pisarro, of the Children's Society, with him. Detective Peter Beery, Assistant District-Attorney Nott and a stenographer also were on hand. They went into Justice Bianchard's private office, where the Justice joined them and there was a short consultation. Hitchcock's lawyers
